

Love in the social age. Talk about your personal experience and state if you judge it so different from your parents...

We're in the 21st century, the social age, where everything is digital and on internet, and so do the love stories and also their attempts. Let's talk in general about the experiences, maybe not the wisest one, but a social one...I was born at the start of the third millennium, my generation is called "the millenials" and we're grew up contemporary to the digital's developments. So, since in the primary school years, our firsts crushes were in school, but, differently from our parents, when the approaches came up, they were on the internet! Using PCs, smartphones and stuff like that. Very different from our parent, because we approach each other 9/10 using internet, it changes completely the game, free messages, sending photo or video. We can express ourselves via smartphones and have different numbers of approaches. But, how was at our parent's? No internet, no PCs and no smartphones. All face to face, except more along in the time with some ringing. Another different game, you have much less chances, you have to be immediately sure of yourself and to express it by the way. No indecision.
